PUSHBUTTON - ALL ELECTRIC HOUSE

A button on the dashboard opens the garage doors of an American "Housewife's Paradise" in California. The all-electric house is run by a hundred and thirty-six switches, forty-four motors, and (the one fly in the ointment) a meter. You want to open a tin? Just press a button. A magnet keeps the lid from falling in.

You want water in the pot? Just press a button.

When carpets need a clean-up in the Housewife's Paradise, yes - just press a button and Oscar, the radar-vacuum, does the work.

When the sandman calls, Oscar can even put himself to bed, too.

You want the beds moved? Just push a button. If only there was a button to stop the meter!
