PARIS WAITERS CAN'T WAIT

Paris clears the boulevards for the annual Waiters' race - the one day of the year when Andre, Jacques and Maurice and the rest of the slow-footed fraternity really get a move on. The contestants wear their working clothes and carry a tray, bottle and glass. En route, they have to serve a customer with a drink - without even stepping for a tip.

No. 71, just watch the superb racing action of this garden.

At the finishing post, the winner completes the course in 12 minutes. In Britain, three courses usually take an hour. But you know how it is - Paris in the Spring.
