SPRING IS LATE A-COMING IN U.S.A.

In the Pacific North-West, Spring at last breaks through - with the help of giant back-scratchers, which claw through record 22-foot snow drifts on the highway to Mount Rainier National Park.

Finally, the roads are cleared, and Winter's last stand is over.

Another sign of Spring, as sheep start the long trek towards their summer grazing lands in the mountains. To get there they've got to cross the Grand Coulee Dam.

Twenty-five hundred ewes and lambs, representing ten million mutton chops, are on the march in this one herd alone. And all in a hurry to begin that long summer holiday.
