

PRINCE CHARLES HAS AN OUTING

At Lovely Windlesham Moor, their recently acquired country home at Summingdale, Princess Elisabeth and Prince Philip spend a happy afternoon with the world's most famous baby. These are the first newreel pictures taken since his christening of Prince Charles - now eight months old.

A heavy programme of official engagements prevents the Princess and the Duke from seeing their son as often as they wish. It is only on occasions like this that they can enjoy the happiness of parenthood.

The way Prince Charles meets the ordeal of facing the cameras so early in life, speaks well for the future, as he will undoubtedly become the most photographed child in the world.

And so the young Prince (still unaware of the great destiny that is his) grows up in the strange new World, yet bears with him the deep affection of the British people.
