

NEW GUINEA GREET'S "THE GOVERNOR"

Tribesmen from Nondugal, in the central highlands of New Guinea, don their ceremonial dress and converge on the island's main airfield to greet a distinguished visitor. More than 7,000 are gathered from hills and valleys to pay their respects as a Dakota lands with the "Big Fella" White Master, Australian Governor-General McKell.

The Australian No. 1 is here to inspect progress made on the Nondugal Experimental Station, where New Guinea natives have been taught to rear sheep for the first time. Friendship blooms on all sides.

The Governor-General, in his best pidgin English, makes a short speech of greeting, translated into native dialect by an interpreter.

An informal get-together follows, and Governor McKell is invited to attend the biggest sing-song ever staged in New Guinea. The natives warm up for a war-dance led by a team of red hot jitterbugs.

A regal welcome, in the heart of the New Guinea jungle.
