CHESTER

QUEEN HONOURS HER REGIMENT

The Army's youngest recruit - six months old Clive Harris - leads the welcome to the Queen, when she visits the Dale, near Chester, to see her Regiment - the Queen's Bays. Colonel-in-Chief of this famed armoured unit, the Queen bids farewell to the men, who will shortly leave for Germany to reinforce the British Army on the Rhine.

With the regiment lining the parade ground around her, the Queen honours the memory of the troopers who gave their all for the Queen's Bays - for Britain and for freedom. A memorial (its dominant figure a mounted trooper of World War One) and wreath from the Colonel-in-Chief pay tribute to the men whose spirit of gallantry and devotion to duty is kept alive today by a new generation of Queen's Bays.
