

STONE-AGE MAKES A COME-BACK

Once man lived in caves. Then he progressed to huts, tents, hovels and finally great houses of wood and brick. Now look where he is - back in the cave. Of course, they never had caves with swimming pools and beautifully gardened terraces in the stone age. Bill and Rosa Yeoman's dwelling near Shelton, Conn. is hewn from solid rock in traditional cave man fashion - but it has all the latest improvements. When Bill wants to water the lawn, he has to climb up on the roof - and when Rosa wants to summon him to supper, she calls through the skylight. Come on, Bill, soup's on.

The Yeomans find their cave home has many advantages. Complete with a large combination living room-bedroom, a kitchen, a bathroom and a garage, it remains an almost constant seventy-two degrees throughout the year. Even Rover lives in a cave - and he wouldn't exchange it for the best dog house in the world.
