Margaret speaking:
'My Lord Mayor, ladies and gentlemen, it is a great pleasure to me to pay this, my first visit to Manchester and to feel the warmth of the welcome with which the citizens of your great city have so kindly received me.
25. L.M.S. I have been very much impressed to read and hear about the notable part, which the Free Trade hall has played in the life of Manchester. As its name implies, the principle link is perhaps that those men who a century ago preached the gospel of free trade have sought to rise the leaders of commerce and agriculture to a broader and more liberal humanity. Their names will always have an honoured place, not only in Manchester, but in history. The hall has also many cultural associations amongst which the name of Halle springs to mind. It was in the Free Trade Hall more than a hundred years ago that he began his world famous series of concerts, which is among the city's richest treasure. I can easily understand what a grievous blow it must have been when the hall which had been the stage for so many historic scenes was destroyed.
26. L.S. I think you have done me a great honour in asking me to commemorate with this stone with the rebuilding of this new hall, which I am sure, is destined to be as vital a centre of civic life as its predecessor. This stone will rest on ground long hallowed by tradition. On these foundations will rise from the ruins a new hall which will be a monument to the glories of the past. More than that, it will be an act of faith in the future and one in which I am delighted to be able to join with my most sincere good wishes.'
