

BRITAIN TOPS IN ATHLETICSLONDON

At the White City in two matches decided over the same events, Britain beats America and the Benelux countries in one and Turkey in the other. In the pole vault the bar wobbled, but Andersen's over to break his own English record with a vault of 13 feet. And here's Allday winding up for his winning hammer throw.

And there she goes ... 168 feet  $4\frac{1}{2}$  inches!

In the hundred, left after several false starts, Macdonald Bailey makes up ground to lead at half-way. Bragg comes again but in a storming finish Bailey holds on to win by inches ... and with the two-twenty lands his Bailey double.

DUBLIN

Next comes good news from Ireland in the Aga Khan Trophy. Here's Captain Tubridy taking Lough Neagh over the 14 jumps, watched by President O'Kelly. Seven countries compete. The Swiss (this is Morfa on Vega) are out of luck. With two horses lame they have to drop out.

Now Colonel Llewellyn and Foxhunter. Third at the end of round one, England, who won in 1947, now lead. A good round and it'll be in the bag.

Beating France, the favourites, by 10 points, England wins the trophy, and the first British Ambassador, Sir Gilbert Lathwaite, sees President O'Kelly make the presentation to a fine team.
