LABOUR PARTY IN CONFERENCE

Enjoying a few quiet moments before the Conference the Prime Minister hopes things will be as smooth as the greens and his form as good. It's an important meeting and delegates from all over the country arrive to hear Party policy. From the Board of Trade export figures Harold Wilson can tell how much food Maurice Webb can buy for us next year.

Aneurin Bevan will cross swords with Mr. Shinwell if defence plans threaten Health service cuts. In the Winter Gardens the assembled conference welcomes the Prime Minister.

Along the front bench we find Dr. Summerskill and Jim Griffiths, Colonial Minister, and Herbert Morrison emphasising points as the Premier speaks. After dealing with many Party interests and the date of the next election - which he left vague, national matters claim attention, and Mr. Attlee gives a solemn warning to the nation.
