It's the annual reindeer round-up time and Canada checks up on her herds. Each year they find a lot of little strangers. It's probably something to do with nature. Anyway, they're branded to show they're Government property and disinfected against disease.

Reindeer are not found wild in Canada. In Lapland, their natural home, they supply everything needed from feed to clothes. Obviously they'd be very valuable to the Eskimos, so two thousand were imported. Just a case where a thoughtful Government gave its imagination rein, dear.

In Miami, 18-year-old Joan Pflueger shows how she shot her way to the title "Champion of Champions" in the annual Grand American trap-shoot. Smashing a hundred flying-saucers out of a hundred, she tied with four men. Then she beat them in the shoot-off, to become the first woman champion. Why doesn't somebody keep his big trap shut.
