

103805

Rome

In Rome Italian racing drivers including Farina face a tough test as their cars line up for the start of a thrilling race.

Electrically propelled, the cars race at the equivalent of 120-miles-an-hour. As they corner on the 30 yard track the driver has to go through all the proper motions. But there's one advantage. If there is a crash, the driver can blame it on the short circuit.