LORRY TUNES 'SUBMARINE'

Florida, where anything can happen, sees a strange new sight. The American Army comes up with a whole of a good idea. It's the Eager Beaver which takes to water like a duck-billed platypus!

The driver breathes with an underwater lung and the motor with a snorkel arrangement.

The 2 1/2-ton truck is designed for heavy-duty work including submersion. If necessary, it can stay under for four hours. As a matter of fact, it could stay much longer, but with so many temptations about you'd soon run out of drivers.

With a bigger lead than he ought to have, the driver comes up for air, and the mermaids return to base. Of course, if the sergeant should happen to be there and thinks he's seeing things, the driver very politely suggests that he should take a little more water with it!
