

ALL SET FOR FESTIVAL

London's South Bank Exhibition is ready to show the world what Britain can do. A hundred years ago our engineering triumphs amazed overseas visitors to the Great Exhibition (of which this is a model). Today, in the Dome of Discovery and the other structures, we show the most modern building wonders - vast, light, airy units without supporting columns to waste space. We've done wonders since the war. Now we're blowing our own trumpet for a change. And of all our triumphs the exhibition is not the least with its hundred-ten, 300-foot skyline calling the world to see Britain this Festival year.

At Hutchinson House, the Duke of Edinburgh inspects another of the Festival attractions - a display of famous sporting trophies, many of them lent for the occasion. These are those Ashes we used to win from Australia. There are nearly 500 items to fascinate sportsmen. Here's the first Derby Cup, raced for in the Isle of Man 300 years ago. For boxers, a Lonsdale Belt.

Next the Bath Club Children's Cup and Shield last won by Princess Margaret and Princess Elizabeth respectively.

Now to the Festival Ship "Compania," which will take something of the Great Exhibition to the ports of Britain. With her large hangar deck the old aircraft carrier is ideal for a travelling display.

At the Festival of Britain we're at home to the World.
