

MAY DAY IN BERLIN

In the Russian sector of Berlin, the usual red signs and banners got their annual airing and East German youth dutifully makes its appearance for the May Day Parade. Last year's parade threatened big trouble which was prevented only by allied firmness. In West Berlin, outside the old Reichstag building decorated with freedom flags and replicas of the freedom bell, it's a very different picture. As allied high commissioners look on, half-a-million Berliners proclaim their defiance of Communism and their determination to be free; and the West wins another battle of the rallies.
