KING INSPECTS BRITISH LEGION

In Hyde Park, six thousand members of the British Legion parade on the 30th anniversary of the Legion's founding for inspection by their patron, His Majesty the King. More than four thousand banners represent the various branches of the great organisation which has done so much for the ex-servicemen.

Following the parade, the legionaires march past.

Her Majesty the Queen is President of the Women's section. Through its many branches the British Legion links those who have served Britain so well in her wars and helps them to retain the comradeship born and tested in the heat of battle.
