LONDON GOES ALL FESTIVE

Bank Holiday and the festival spirit pulls the crowds to the South Bank exhibition. With 93-thousand turning up, it's queues everywhere, but nobody seems to care a snap. Already more than half a million people have had a look-see.

From the exhibition the Lord Mayor of London says 'goodbye' to Stanley Smith who is off to New York with Charles Violet in the little Nova Empire. Two years ago Stanley with his brother sailed the little 20-foot sloop into Dartmouth 43 days after leaving Nova Scotia. This time his voyage is a contribution to the Festival. He'll be exhibiting British products, when he gets over the other side.

Now over to Battersea where the Fun Fair's opened just in time for the holidays. It's full of horrors like the Octopus - two minutes of whirling bliss - and heaven help your tummy. It's amazing how they lap it up!

Business is searing. Already they're turning thousands away. The queues are so long you need a taxi to take your proper place. Eighty thousand got in and they report there's plenty of fun at the Fun Fair.
