

GRAIN SHIPS REACH INDIA

To Calcutta, ships of the world bring grain to save the starving millions of Bihar. Their crops destroyed by the rains, their roads made unpassable, the people of this large province faced certain death from want. Through the years famine has not been far distant. One-hundred-and-fifty-years ago an English officer built this huge granary in Patna, the capital, for the perpetual prevention of famine; but even here there is no longer food for the thousands who swarm into the capital.

But now, the grain ships dock. We had little to spare but they had none. In this tragedy of Bihar there is for us encouragement in its proof that nations today are more ready and willing to come to the aid of each other in times of need.
