TRUCE TALKS - SOME HEADWAY

Peace House, Kaesong. In one of the few undamaged buildings Allies and Reds hold their truce talks guarded by Communist guns. Pictures of heavily armed North Koreans and Chinese are cleverly used by Communist propoganda.

The United Nations delegates arrive - unarmed and flying the white flag. Communist sentries provide a strange contrast.

A Yank puts out a private peace feeler. Not to be outdone a Red girl soldier offers some chocolate. Others just wait and think. Will today see the end of the fighting?

The meeting's over. The United Nations delegation has made some concessions. But though some progress was made the Communist delegates have tried to snatch political advantage even in defeat, demanding complete withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea.

The Allies, at last wise to Communist tactics, leave without giving way. They have shown ample proof of good will. Let the Communists, at the next meeting, show theirs.
