BRIXHAM REMEMBERS

From lovely old Brixham goes a salute to the people of Holland in a pageant of the landing of William of Orange. Stadtholder of the Dutch Republic, he came as a friend to free England from James II. "If I am welcome, come and carry me," tradition says was his greeting, and that's how he became the William half of William and Mary, more or less. Today, in the shadow of his statue, walks another Dutchman, Dr. Burgerhoff-Mulder, as William of Orange, and Brixham rejoices as her people did 263 years ago.

JERSEY

Over in Jersey their fun's not quite so serious. It's their famous Battle of Flowers and under the approving eyes of the Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Edward Grassett, Jersey puts on something special - yes, I see what I mean! - to mark Festival Year.

Hullo, big-head! He's so well and truly lit up that they've had to fetch the old-time fire-brigade. And here's a case where misfortune could be good luck for somebody!

Jersey Women's Institutes symbolize the United Nations ... because all the lovely things in life could be ours if the nations were really united for peace.
