new city x rises from the first atom-bomb's ashes. This was Riroshima in the wake of the bomb -- six years ago.

Here, where a hundred thousand died from one bomb, today -- not to the sound of an airraid siren, but of a bell of peace -- another American bember flies everhead, to drop a wreathe of flowers.

Throughout at the city, citizens bow their heads in a moment of silent memory.

During the day-long men memorial, the survivors pay tribute at shrines and churches to those who perished.

To the children born in six years ago in Hammin Riroshima, this is a day of awe beyond their young understanding. For to them this is a world where "Hiroshima" never happened. And, as for men and women of peace everywhere, this is a world where atomic warfare is only restorday's nightmare
