IAN STEEL WINS CYCLE "TOUR"

Thirty-four survivors out of forty-nine starters begin the last stage of the "Daily Express" Tour of Britain race, with Ian Steel still wearing the leader's yellow jersey. Interest is centred in Steel's chance to win the big prize for the best time for the whole tour, but Garnier, Lonsan and Addie slip the field in a race for the "day's stage" prize and the honour of being first man home. We'll stick with Steel and the main bunch for the time being.

Steel is through Royston, but it's a bit sticky for the rest.

Father turns and we all turn! They're nearing the finish and Steel puts on a spurt. Nobody can catch him for the big prize now if he keeps clear of trouble. But at Hampstead a half-dressed crowd ten thousand strong sees a thrilling finish as the Frenchman Garnier wins the stage prize.

Now, on a bike borrowed after a crash near home, Ian Steel storms to the finish to win the laurels for Scotland.
