PAKISTAN PREMIER ASSASSINATED

The wise and friendly voice of Liaquat Ali Khan, here seen with the Prime Minister, will be missing when next Commonwealth leaders meet in Downing Street. Just two years ago he spoke for Pakistan when they met to plan defence and social welfare.

Right-hand man of the late Mohammed Ali Jinnah, founder of Pakistan, his task was to steer the young state through many dangers. He aligned his country with the great work of the Commonwealth.

With Pakistan and India still divided, the bullets of an assassin killed Liaquat Ali Khan just 40 miles from Kashmir, the last great problem between the two countries. The world has lost a wise counsellor.
