

51/84

THE ROYAL TOUR

Ottawa, capital of the Dominion, welcomes the Royal couple, and to Parliament building (where so often Canada has pledged her support to freedom) comes Princess Elizabeth for an occasion very close to her heart.

Here is housed Queen Mary's carpet. Bought by Canadian women as a gift to their nation, it's to be handed over by the Princess.

It's just 50 years since Queen Mary - then Duchess of Cornwall and York - visited Canada ... And so to Toronto and a monster welcome from 38,000 kiddies.

And here (as two V.Cs - Sergeant Tombs and Lieutenant-Colonel MacDowell are presented) the kiddies fairly let themselves go, at Exhibition Park.

At Riverdale Park, it's a big moment for 9-year-old Sandra Greber. She's meeting the Princess all her friends are talking about. During the tour the Duke is making a point to see that children and the ordinary people get a good view of the Princess - and photographers have been asked to stand aside so that everyone can see.

Next step is Niagara. Like all good tourists, the Royal couple can't miss one of the world's greatest sights ... and that means another look to sign!

The Horse-Shoe Falls are 160 feet high. With mags on, Princess Elizabeth and the Duke admire the impressive spectacle from a new platform opened only this year. Ahead lie more and more formal occasions, but for a fleeting moment they're just another of the many thousands of couple visiting Niagara during a rare moment of relaxation.

Ottawa, capital of the Dominion, welcomes the royal couple and to Parliament building - where so often Canada has pledged her support to freedom - comes Princess Elizabeth for an occasion very close to her heart.

Sc. 6

Here is housed Queen Mary's Carpet. Bought by Canadian women as a gift to their nation, it's to be handed over by the Princess.

Sc. 10

It's just 70 years since Queen Mary - then Duchess of Cornwall and York - visited Canada....And so to Toronto and a monster welcome from 38,000 kiddies.

Sc. 13

And here, as two V.C.s - Sergeant Tombs and Lieutenant-Colonel MacBowell are presented - the kiddies fairly let themselves go, at Exhibition Park.

Sc. 16

At Riverdale Park, it's a big moment for 9-year-old Sandra Greber. She's meeting the Princess all her friends are talking about. During the tour the Duke is making a point to see that children and the ordinary people get a good view of the Princess - and pressmen have received a few pointed hints to keep out of the way.

Sc. 22

Next stop is Niagara. Like all good tourists, the royal couple can't miss one of the world's greatest sights...and that means another book to sign!

Sc. 25

The Horse-Shoe Falls are 160 feet high. With macs on, Princess Elizabeth and the Duke admire the impressive spectacle from a new platform opened only this year. It's a rare moment of relaxation. Ahead lie more and more formal occasions, but for a fleeting moment they're just another of the many thousands of couples who've looked at Niagara and marvelled at their own happiness.