

ENGLAND v. WALES

Wales kick off at Twickenham and England (playing in white) know they've a tough game on hand, and here's an attack started by Alan Thomas playing instead of Bleddyn Williams. But Winn collects and finds touch for England. It's a good hard game from the start - and quite a few injuries before full time. Lewis Jones, No. 5, has done himself a bit of no good. That ought to help England's chances, though the betting's on the faster Welsh team.

Now England attack. Woodward beats Lewis Jones, passes to Agar and the Harlequins man is away. England will score here - yes, he's through and he's touched down for an easy kick.

But Hook's missed - two easy points gone begging.

Almost at once England attack again ... Hall receives and passes to Woodward ... and they'll never catch him.

It's a difficult kick, and as Hook misses again, England lead six-nil. Now Ken Jones is away for Wales - and just watch his beautiful run. The Welsh are yards faster than the English.

Thomas converts and at half-time it's England six, Wales five.

In the second half, Ken Jones scores again. Here he goes, like an eel, beating Englishmen after Englishmen.

Lewis Jones missed the difficult kick, but that's enough and Wales win by eight points to six.
