X Northern California, buried under millions of tons of snow, digs out. Night and day, plows work on the white blanket left by a series of blizzards, California's worst in 50 years. 30

X These men are digging for an automobile--and they've just reached the roof. Wasn't this a foolish place to park a car?

X This postman is slowed up considerably in the swift completion of his appointed rounds.

X This shows you how deep the snow is on one highway: 26 feet. Many roads ^{AT DUNN} remain snowbound.

X The crack streamliner City of San Francisco, bound from Chicago to San Francisco, is still snowbound ~~at the High Sierras~~, though the 222 persons aboard were taken off. After long hours of digging, the luxury train is freed, and she pulls out of her snow in the High Sierras prison. Five days behind schedule, she's on her way again.
