

INDO-CHINA FIGHTS REDS

Near Hanoi, paratroopers prepare to join in a big attack on rebel Viet Minh forces attacking 15 miles east of the city. At the front infantry move forward to attack. Since the late General de Lattre de Tassigny reorganized local forces, attack has become the chief weapon and rebel losses have been heavy.

Here comes the big drop to screen off a battlefield. It's difficult and dangerous country, and thick undergrowth must be cleared before the enemy can be driven back.

With the area under control the work of getting out the wounded begins.

Now the infantry move forward to smash another threat to Hanoi, and the operation is successfully completed, as fighters launch a jelly-bomb attack on the retreating rebels.
