

WALES v. SCOTLAND

Wales kick off at Cardiff Arms Park against Scotland - wearing the dark shirts. Victory will make them firm favourites for the Triple Crown. They're favourites but the spectre of what happened at Murrayfield last year is there to put them on their mettle. The ground's slippery and the ball will soon be greasy so anything might happen, but rightaway Wales are pressing.

Olympic sprinter Ken Jones gets the ball, but Derward intercepts.

With twenty minutes gone, there's a penalty against Scotland.

It's a difficult kick for Malcolm Thomas - but it's over and Wales lead by three points.

Now it's Derward for Scotland. He's intercepted but passes to Davidson. Davidson on to Cordial.

Alun Thomas has it and he's running through, but doesn't get very far. The Welsh team isn't playing up to expectations - maybe it's the bad ground.

But here's a chance ... Thomas passes to Ken Jones and he's away like a flash. They won't catch him this time ... it's a try all over.

It's an easy kick for Malcolm Thomas and at half-time Wales lead by eight points to nil.

Second-half, with Wales attacking again. Scotland are doing a lot better than the experts expected and Wales will have to pull out a bit better at Dublin to win the Triple Crown.

Another penalty to Wales. Malcolm Thomas obliges and Wales win by eleven points to nil. The tussle is over and two tired sides leave the field, with Wales all set for the Triple Crown.
