

MORE ANZACS FOR KOREA

Through the streets of Sydney march 1,400 men of the Royal Australian Regiment and a detachment of New Zealand gunners on their way to join their comrades who have been fighting in Korea since the beginning. The Governor-General, Sir William McKell, takes the salute. At the wharf it's the old familiar scene. As there was no security guard on this sailing these scenes were filmed for the first time in nearly forty years.

It is to bring to an end the need for partings such as this that the United Nations strive; and it is to give authority to the United Nations that these men and ours and the men of all nations fighting aggression in Korea go cheerfully into action. Till would-be aggressors learn that there is no profit in aggression there can be no real peace in this troubled world.
