

MAN'S SUIT WINS £50

Meet Mr. Leonard, a London sanitary inspector, who started sewing last year and then made up his mind to make himself a suit. Not content with that, he entered it in the National Sewing Contest at the Mayfair Hotel, which brings us up-to-date as Madame Massigli, wife of the French ambassador helps to judge entries. Betty Chafer of Doncaster submitted this £50-prize-winning clerical grey worsted day dress. A pig-skin dog-collar belt curves the waist.

Mrs. Sanford of Southport won her prize with this black baratheia suit.

You wouldn't think this came from the fingers of a teenager - it won the best Teenager Entry prize for Audrey Longmore, of Benges Wick, Hertford. It's made in figured brocade in a delicate shade of lilac.

Now it's Mr. Leonard's turn ... This is his striped navy blue suit which took him $3\frac{1}{2}$ months to make. Now he wins £50, and he keeps his suit - which - er - suits Mr. Leonard very nicely.
