

LONDON'S LAST TRAM

It's "goodbye" to the old clangers, as London's "Last Tram Week" comes to an end and they're doing good work to the end. Fares taken on this one go to help the infantile paralysis fund.

And here's Ethel Revnell, fevers and all, ready to knock 'em in the Old Kent Road in a grand cause.

But here's the last tram just arriving from Woolwich at the New Cross Depot. It's 91 years since London got her first tram, so they've had a pretty good run for London's money! Well, you've missed the last No. 40 for the last time.

Great-grandpa will tell you there's not much you can do in the back seat of a chara you couldn't do on the old trams. They had a wonderful sway about them.
