ROYAL INVESTITURE

Buckingham Palace is the scene of the first of five investitures the Queen will hold in a month. Compton Mackenzie received his knighthood, as did George Graham, secretary of the Scottish Football Association.

To Lady Apsley, lately chairman of the Women's Section, British Legion, The C.B.E.

Inspector Shipton of the Metropolitan Police receives the George Medal for gallantry under fire in tackling an armed man in Maida Vale.

Constable Darby, Constable Mackenzie (left with Mrs. Mackenzie) and Constable Bailey, here with Mrs. Bailey and his mother, were the other members of the unit. All three received the George Medal.

Also at the Palace, the Queen holds the first garden party of her reign as 7,000 guests await to greet Her Majesty.

The Duke of Edinburgh, just over an attack of jaundice, accompanies the Queen, and, as head of the Royal household, the Lord Chamberlain, the Earl of Clarendon, is in attendance; and here's Princess Margaret with a group of friends, at this occasion of formal informality.
