

TOUR DE FRANCE

Riders in the world's most grueling cycle race leave Monaco for Aix-en-Provence.

133 miles to go, a 6,000-foot mountain en route and a blazing sun hot enough to make even Senegalese troops glad just to stand still!

As they pass through Frejus, there's a cooling spray that's welcome to everyone. Further on methods are more primitive. Right idea, wrong target.

Now Detto, Vivier, Quentin and Romy sprint and Romy overtakes Vivier to go through and win the day's stage, and a nice lump of cash for his trouble.

And there goes Romy across the line. After this race they always drink their toasts and other drinks standing up for quite a long while!
