ROYAL SCOTS MEMORIAL

To Edinburgh comes the Princess Royal, as Colonel-in-Chief, to honour the Royal Scots, the oldest regiment in the British Army. After inspecting a parade of present and past members of the regiment the Princess Royal unveils a magnificent monument to the glorious history of the Regiment. Standing in West Princes Street gardens, it's said to be the finest building in Scotland since the Scottish National War Memorial.

Three hundred and twenty years of loyal service march past as the Royal Scots (the Royal Regiment) salute their Colonel-in-Chief, in the heart of the city where they were first formed.
