HELICOPTERS HERE FROM U.S.

Making landfall over Ayrshire, two United States Air Force helicopters complete the first Atlantic crossing by hoverplanes. It's the end of a 3,420 miles flight from Massachusetts as they come in over Prestwick Airport.

They're on a service flight to Germany and here comes Hopalong. Well, it was a long hep from their last take-off, Keflavik in Iceland, 950 miles away. The beauty of these ugly things is that you can put 'em just where you like, but don't be too fussy - they've been flying ten hours to get here!

The flight was a test to see whether it's cheaper to fly 'em over than to send them by sea. Captains McEgovern, Moore, Jeffers and Hambriok had quite a bit of trouble this time. n Hoverplanes have just evacuated 15-hundred Allied troops from flood areas in Korea. They may be funny to look at, but they're good.
