WATER TITLE BID ENDS IN SMOKE

By Lake Windermere, where they hope to bring the water-speed record back to Britain, Frank Hanning-Lee the pilot and his wife, Sheila, make a last-minute inspection of their $14,000 jet-beat "White Hawk." It was slightly damaged only a short time ago on this same lake, but everyone's hoping she'll have better luck today. The course is clear, so out goes "White Hawk" to the starting line.

A roar from her jet-engine and "White Hawk" begins her run. As she gathers speed, her bow lifts out of the water until she's almost skating.

Something's gone wrong and "White Hawk" is brought to a stop. Her engine's on fire, so there will be no more racing today! But just as soon as she's been repaired, the Hanning- Lees will be having another crack at the record.
