FASHION FLASHES

The shape of shoes to come during the winter will be something like this. They're called Mayfair Bottines - diamonds-studded shoes in black satin. Canadian-born Pat Gillan models a strapped evening sandal in black velvet.

To show that winter needn't mean black, here's a gold, elasticized evening shoe that would flatter any feet. But on now to gowns: here's an Elizabeth Hinton "special." A gold slipper satin wedding dress with matching cap and embroidered bodice. Its price? Only eight guineas.

Sylvia shows a shocking pink stole over a black-and-white jumper. Just look what fashion's done to her waist-line!

Into the limelight comes Marjol in a pink stole and jumper with a necklace that's as fashionable today as when grandma wore it.

Irene models a two-way black skirt, and if you want to know what I mean by "Two-way," watch closely - as if I need to tell you!

Yes, reverse the skirt and you've got two for the price of one. Although it's British-made it's pretty obvious that France had a lot to do with this can-can cocktail dress -- oo, la, la! We've all heard a lot about the naughty nineties - it seems to me we're in the flighty fifties!
