

PRE-FABS. FOR THE BUSH

The latest thing in pre-fab. homes looks a lot like something out of the African bush - and that's just the sort of place it's intended for. Designed by experts after many experiments, the home is made up of aluminium panels. No one piece of the whole structure weighs more than thirty pounds, so it's just the job for up-country where no lorry can reach - and you don't have to be an expert builder to put it up.

You can make the bungalows whatever size you like simply by adding another unit. Mrs. Martin, whose home is near Nairobi, has lived in one of these "clusters" (as they are called) for more than a year. Yes, all mod. cons. in Kenya these days! It won't be long before such comfortable homes as the Martins have got are springing up in all parts of the world for they're selling like hot-cakes. But, like most good things these days - they're all labelled "Export only."
