THE WORLD THROUGH PATHE CAMERAS

Malaya

The Duchess of Kent and her son, the young Duke, went into the danger zone in Malacca when they visited a rubber estate, escorted by the Gordon Highlanders. Unknown to the Duchess, evidence had been found of preparations for an ambush. There was fresh soil upturned where slit trenches had been dug. But the security services in Malaya have improved under General Templer. As calmly as at a garden party, the Duchess inspects the rubber plantation, a British industry that has carried on in Malaya in spite of all hazards.

Japan

It's the latest picture news coming from overseas into Pathe House. We have a Japanese edition, too, and from our cameramen there comes a report of the latest victory of the Oxford University rugby side. This was the last of seven out of seven games won. But let's have an eye-witness account from our Oriental sports reporter

Thank you, and in case any of our patrons at Oxford didn't quite follow that, the final score was Oxford 52 points, "Japan All Stars" nil.

Montmartre

And on the B.E.A. plane from Paris came this gay little trifle from Montmartre. A wine festival, they call it, in a tiny vineyard in the shadow of Sacre Coeur, but it looks to us as though our friends at Pathe Journal wanted to put an extra kick into their newsreel.

They've Can-can girls from the Tabarin, and it's all in aid of the children of Montmartre.

Sardinia

Rome sent us this confection from the island of Sardinia. It's the annual folklore cavalcade at Sassari.

Not very newsworthy, we admit, but it's a splash of colour and a ray of sunshine to brighten up the cold Autumn days in Britain.
