

LONDON PAGEANTRY

Crowds throng Westminster as, to St. Margaret's Church, comes lovely Miss Virginia Ryan (nineteen-year-old daughter of an American millionaire) for her wedding to Lord Ogilvy - and what a beautiful bride she makes on this bright Autumn day.

As the solemn service draws to its close, an escort of pipers of the Scots Guards provide a splash of colour and gay music. Now the pipes herald the appearance of the bride and groom.

The Queen Mother and Princess Margaret, both wearing velvet, are the young couples' most distinguished guests on their wedding day.

Marty Martin and debonair Douglas Fairbanks are there, but it is the Queen Mother who gets the warmest reception from the crowd as she and the Princess drive through the streets of Westminster for home.

London's Albert Hall provides the setting for dancers from twenty-four countries who hold last-minute rehearsals before they take part in this year's International Dance Festival. The colour and pageantry - and the folk dances - of London's guests brighten the city. This is the Belgian team.

One party of lovely girls flew in from Brazil to show us the real samba.

Coming nearer home, here's a team from France.

Now, the Welsh show us one of their traditional dances. This festival, now an annual event, brings the magic of other lands to our own London town.
