At the Royal Albert Hall, after the parade of the mighty muscle men, the mightiest of them all, "Giant Gargantua," takes to the ring. This colossal German wrestler stands eight feet tall and weighs fifty stone! How does he do it on our rations? Here comes the answer. "Strangler Bright," who looks pretty big against anyone else, is his opponent. Catch-as-catch-can they call this - try catching fifty stone and see where it gets you.

"Gargantua" can stand so much and no more before he loses his patience - and "Strangler" nearly loses his head!

I'll huff and I'll puff and blow me down, he won't go down.

By now "Strangler" is worn down to his last collar bone - won't be long now.

Time to get up Mister! Who won the fight? I give you one guess!

A very important race horse arrives home in Britain and Mr. Boucher, his owner, is here to receive him. Yes, just back from America is "Wilwyn," the horse that beat the world's best and won £18,000 into the bargain. But he's gone all shy and just won't budge, now he's here.

After half-an-hour the star of the show deigns to make the effort. "Wilwyn" slips on the gangway and, for a moment, it is thought he has broken a leg. But a vet reports he is almost unharmed - and that he'll soon be fit again.
