

CANADIAN SAILORS' ART SCHOOL

Her Majesty's Canadian ship "Magnificent" has become a floating school of art. Everywhere you look brushes and pencils are being wielded by officers and men alike. Lieut-Commander Anthony Law, who was formerly a war-artist, organized a club for all ranks when their ship sailed on a four-months cruise in European and Mediterranean waters. Since then there's been no stopping them - everything and everybody goes down on the canvas.

The ships carpenters soon make up frames for the paintings and even the barber's shop goes gay. Gaston Boulanger, the man in the chair, was responsible for these. Paintings from nearly every country he's visited adorn the walls of the barber's and his mess-deck - but he's proudest of all of this one - Prince Charles.
