QUEEN SEES IDEAL HOMES

A perfect scale model of the Coronation State Coach, complete with full retinue, is the high-spot of the 1953 "Daily Mail" Ideal Homes Exhibition in London. When Her Majesty the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh visit the show, they pay special attention to the magnificent cavalcade which is more than a hundred feet in length.

The ideal garden for the ideal home is another attraction at the exhibition. Lakes, lawns, fountains and hundreds of beautiful flowers have all been arranged by gardening experts. Officials accompany the Queen and the Duke on their tour of the gardens, which are lit by artificial sunlight. Some homes you can order straight from the stands. It's the first time for fourteen years it's been possible, so salesmen are standing by for a big rush. Her Majesty inspects one of them.

Labour and space saving devices equip all the new houses, many of which can be ready for occupation before winter. British craftsmen combine ingenuity and grace in this year's ideal home.
