MIG BORDER INCIDENT

Even as the wreckage of an American Sabre Jet shot down in Germany by two MIGs, is examined, there comes news that another MIG has shot down an R.A.F. Lincoln, killing her crew of six. Lieutenant Brown, on the right, is the pilot of the American jet who managed to bale out before the crash. The MIGs, which have been making the headlines since these attacks, are not faring so well in combat in Korea. United Nations jet fighters are taking a heavy toll of them in the skies over the battle zone. Cameras record some of the kills.

At ten miles a minute, United Nations pilots are tracking down and destroying the best pilots the enemy can put into the air.

KOREA AIR WAR

Rise -- Zaruch

skies

In the ~~six~~ ~~skies~~ high above Korea, United Nations and Communist jets tangle in deadly, aerial dog-fights. Gun cameras mounted on the wings of our F-86 Sabrejets catch sensational shots of direct hits on Red MIG's, which are sent screaming into the ground in flames.

These planes are dueling at better than ten miles a minute,

and these films testify to the tremendous skill of our

pilots in tracking down and destroying the best pilots

the enemy can put in the air.
