

ENGLAND v. SCOTLAND

England meet Scotland at Wembley and that means there isn't a seat to be found anywhere in the house. Scotland, in navy blue shirts, kick off and set the ball rolling in the most vital international of the year. England move down to the Scots' end and Froggatt's shot is saved by Farn.

Scotland are on the attack. Young Tommy Docherty, ever on the right flank, sends in a centre. Merrick takes a tumble in saving, but he manages to cope.

Back come white shirted England. Iver Broadis receives and smartly beats Frank Brennan's challenge. On he races towards the Scottish goal. He shoots, but goalie Farn just gets there.

England keep up the pressure, playing the sort of stuff we expect at Wembley.

Finney to Broadis, who crashes it in for England's first goal!

Billie Steel receives for Scotland who are fighting back with everything they've got - and that's plenty. A hard shot hits the crossbar: that was a close one for England. Here comes another moment that shakes the England supporters.

Scotland still haven't scored by half time, but they're putting up a great show and making those critics who forecast an easy victory for England eat their words. Just watch their forwards go into action like a well oiled machine.

Bobby Johnstone shoots, the ball rebounds, but Reilly is there to finish the job. England and Scotland are one all.

With the score equal, England team up to crack Scotland's defence.

Nat Lofthouse gets it and lines it up for Froggatt, who taps it a shade too near goalie Farn who takes a dive at Froggatt's feet and keeps his goal intact.

Tom Finney leads an English rush. Cox intercepts but Finney centres to Broadis who bangs it in for England's second goal! But Cox is hurt. He injured his ankle during that tussle with Finney and a stretcher party is called on. Scotland are up against it now with only ten men. They'll certainly miss Cox who's been defending brilliantly.

Broadis has it for England. A pass to Wright who sets his team going towards the Scots' goal again. Well in the fore is Lofthouse. He sends over a centre, but Farn cuts it off. Ivor Broadis has it ...

But he misses way over the top! There are only a few seconds of play left, but Scotland aren't going to go down without a fight, and keep up the pressure.

Reilly and Johnstone team up. Reilly gets to it. He shoots - and he's done it! Scotland have made it a draw with England by two goals apiece, right on the final whistle.
