

£50,000 GOLD PLATE

In London, the finishing touches are put to a magnificent dessert, coffee and liqueur service, made entirely of solid 18 carat gold. Worth at least £50,000 the collection has been made with the same craftsmanship that put Britain's goldsmiths right on top many centuries ago. The main object of the collection is to show future generations how great was the skill still prevailing in this country in Coronation year.

One who designed many of the pieces in the collection, Mr. Algernon Asprey, inspects an exquisite fruit dish. But here's the complete service - the result of a year's hard work and many generations of experience.

Experts agree that this is one of the most perfect collections made for many years. Soon it is hoped that all the pieces, each of which bears the special Coronation Hall Mark, will be toured throughout the United States.
