

ROYAL RHODESIAN VISIT.

To Untali, a village in Southern Rhodesia, comes Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother and Princess Margaret. Here, as at all places on the royal route, they receive a warm welcome. The Queen Mother walks to unveil a statue of Kingsley Fairbridge, one of the first Rhodes scholars, who founded many schools throughout the Commonwealth to maintain and train orphans brought from Britain.

After a short ceremony, the Queen Mother chats with Mrs. Fairbridge, widow of the great benefactor. Hundreds of children get their final glimpse of the royal visitors as they move towards their car to continue their visits to outlying towns and villages.

After a journey through some of the country's most beautiful scenery, the royal car arrives at Zimbabwe Ruins. Here stand remains of massive buildings, which date back to the fourteenth century. Some of the walls are over 30 feet high and 1½ feet thick. In recent years, Zimbabwe has been a favourite spot for sightseers, and the Queen Mother adds her name to the visitors book.

At Morgenster, African Girl Guides give a display of marching. Sitting beside The Queen Mother is 91 year old Andrew Louw, who sixty years ago founded the Morgenster mission for African children.

Finger Rock a strange landmark in the Mission grounds is also visited.

At Leopard Rock Hotel, near Untali, Princess Margaret remains indoors with a slight cold, but the Queen Mother goes for many strolls around the beautiful grounds. Although she has travelled about seven thousand miles since she left Britain, Her Majesty again willingly poses for photographers.

On across the magnificent rolling African countryside travels the royal train, bearing the Queen Mother and her younger daughter on their triumphant journey in which they have won the affection of all in Southern Rhodesia.
