Trieste has maintained a calm and dignified attitude after the Anglo American decision to withdraw occupation forces and turn zone A of Trieste Free Territory over to Italy. People breath with relief and in the piassas and cafes they congratulate each other, even if everybody is obviously concerned for the fate of their brothers in Zone B which are left to endure hardish Yugoslav domination.

Italian flags are hoistered again all over, on the City Hall as well as in private houses, while the whole town is expecting the mement when Italian troops will actually enter, to be sure that their dearest hope has become truth and to give way to their repressed enthusiasm.
