

GENEVA: TALKS START.

Again Geneva plays its part in the world's constant endeavours for peace. 19 delegations, from both sides of the Iron Curtain, attend a conference on the many Far Eastern problems. Mr. Chou En-Lai, Prime Minister of China, arrives. Next is Mr. John Foster Dulles, America's Secretary of State.

Mr. Molotov, Russia's Foreign Minister, and Mr. Gromyko enter the Palais des Nations. Now M. Bidault, the French Foreign Minister, who will press for Anglo-American help in Indo-China. Mr. Anthony Eden, whose memory must surely harken back to the days before the war when he figured so prominently in this same building when it housed the ill-fated League of Nations. So violently do East and West seem opposed on such matters as the future of Korea, and, of course, Indo-China, that it will take great patience and wisdom from all if satisfactory solutions are to be found.
