DOCTORS SAVE DUTCH TWINS.

Two little Dutch girls born Siamese twins are handed to their mother who is to take them back home from a hospital at Leeuwarden. It was at this hospital that the children (joined from chest to stomach at birth) were separated successfully. Their names are Chisky and Folly de Vries. Their thirty-one year old mother has five other children at home.

So to Molenend where the de Vries have a small council house. Neighbours turn out to greet Chisky and Folly. Professor Aird, the British Surgeon, who separated baby Beka from her sister Tama, advised the Dutch Surgeon who performed the operation. Happily, it was not as complicated as the one performed by Professor Aird - and it was soon evident that both the children would survive. Now, just as fit as all their brothers and sisters, they're home again. Although it is about a month since they were separated, the twins are unhappy and lonely unless they sleep close to each other in the same cot.
